

Changing Climate Show

Object Theater (2011)

Science North, Sudbury, Ontario

The Changing Climate Show is a new object theater, redesigned from the ground up to reflect the great changes in public understanding of this important scientific and social issue.

The Changing Climate Show features the return of our beloved rubber bootied, animated narrator Sheepie, voiced by Rick Mercer. With Sheepie, visitors revisit Sheep Hill, the stage of our original production The Climate Change Show, to see how the past decade have affected our woolly friends. The sheep are hard at work trying to figure out why their pasture is drying out. Luckily, they have a valuable tool in their endeavor: The Fleece-net. The Fleece-net is a worldwide communications network run by sheep all over the globe. Through the Fleece-net, they share concerns, ideas and solutions from all over the globe that can be adapted to their local context.

The focus of the show is not about whether climate change is happening or not, but how we must adapt to the challenge. It is about the positive steps we can taking to minimize our impact on the planet. The topic is timely, the experience is fun, and the technological effects are stunning.

Media Solutions

Whimsical and visually stunning set
Custom audio, lighting, and original animation
Weather effects
Multiple projections
Fast paced and humorous storyline

Footprint 1,500 sq. ft.
Seating 20-45 guests
Value $650,000