

The Climate Change Show

Traveling Exhibit (2003-2009)

The Climate Change Show traveling exhibit let visitors see, hear, and understand the reality of our changing global climate through a delightful and dramatic object theater presentation and accompanying exhibits. The show and exhibits clarified the complex science and physical processes behind climate change.

The object theater is a traveling version of Science North's award winning permanent theater. Narrated by an animated sheep in rubber boots, the show reveals, in a humorous way, the serious challenges of climate change, the science behind the global trend, and some of the solutions.

Hands-on exhibits were included to compliment the object theater. Together they provided an educational and fun experience that awakened visitors' minds and senses to this serious and important issue. Throughout the exhibits, visitors explored the impacts of climate change on ecosystems, people, and industry. Visitors had the opportunity to test their knowledge and evaluate aspects of their own lifestyle with respect to climate change.

"The Climate Change Show was a hit with our visitors of all ages. It helps make sense of a complex and serious issue in an original, entertaining way."

*Joanne DiCosimo,
Past-President,
Canadian Museum
of Nature*

Footprint 3,000 sq. ft.
Value $560,000

